Description

Slowly, as I fight gravity, I begin to lean to the left out toward the water. It is a slow, agonizing several seconds as I feel my body twisting left. I let go of the sheet and reach with my right hand to grab hold of something, anything, to regain my balance. The inertia is too great. I continue this sickening, contorting twisting and slowly, ever so slowly, I rotate backwards and fall into the frigid waters of the Strait of Georgia.
